From Rev Tom

The SFED (Spiritual Formation, Education and Discipleship) group is presently reading a book called, The Spirituality of Age: A Seeker's Guide to Growing Older. One of the odd things we read last week was the claim that when we first get married our love for our partner is somewhat an illusion. It is suggesting that we are more likely falling in love with the characteristics that we are projecting onto our partner rather than who the partner really is. That is a rather shocking claim. But there is a sense that it also has to be true. In reality I still don't know my wife Kathy. There will be things about her that I will not know until we have both lived to the fullness of our lives together. Before we were married I really didn't know what it would be like to live with her. I didn't know what she was going to be like as a mum. I still don't know what she will be like as a retired person, and as she gets old. The person I fell in love with was someone who I knew only a little and the authors of the book claim that a lot of my love was for characteristics that I projected on to her. Fortunately, despite this there is a wisdom in our faith and culture that supports by way of the commitment we make in marriage. That commitment is that we will love and cherish each other till death do us part. I always marvelled at this promise because of two major characteristics. First, it is wonderfully hopeful, and it is wonderfully inspiring each time I hear the vows come from the mouths of the couple. The other element is that love is something that arises out of our will. While most couples getting married experience something of being swept off their feet with the power of romantic affection toward one another, that typically lasts only so long. For some it is a bit scary when they realise this romantic affection has gone. But built into the marriage ceremony, built into the vows, is a much more profound and lasting understanding of love. That is the determination that I will love beyond the romance, and I will love my partner as I continue to discover who that person really is, in all circumstances and stages of life. It might also seem a bit odd to say, but this is equally true in how we learn to love ourselves. For many of us we have all sorts of dreams for our life, all sorts of beliefs in our capacities, and value our particular strengths. But what happens when we get old? What happens when things we were so proud of are not things we can do anymore? What then? Well, it seems then is when we learn even more the nature of God's love, the agape love, the love of the will! We don't value ourselves for all those wonderful things we were going to be, or could do, but we are invited to love ourselves, just as we are, with all our growing limitations. Our bodies become lesser, but a love becomes stronger and stronger. We might have been able to fill a room with the fine smells of a glorious meal, but now with a simple smile we fill the room with the fragrance of love and grace, just as we are. Gone entirely is the love of all the illusions of who we might be, but we love the reality of who we are, and that love is from God, and is of God. Love is never about the worthiness of the subject, it is about the character of the giver.

Hunter
Community
Alliance

The Hunter Community Alliance has invited Mayor Kay Fraser to meet with the 22 member organisations of the Alliance in order to follow up commitments made by the Mayor prior to last year's Local Government elections. These commitments concern a number of initiatives addressing the homelessness and climate emergencies. The meeting will seek to identify ways the Alliance, Mayor and Council can work together to make the policy commitments come to fruition.

The meeting will take place on

Thursday 8 September at 3pm

at

Garden Suburb Uniting Church

You are invited to attend, lend your support and witness the Community Alliance at work.

For more information, contact Rev Tom Stuart or Anne Threlfo

SFED group are currently reading a book entitled

Spirituality of Ageing: A Seekers Guide.

If you have any thoughts or insights from your own experiences, let us know, as we each experience God's presence differently and where God is.

In the near future we aim to share insights from this book and your thoughts as well.

Talk to your elder about this.
